1911-1943

AIR PICK-UP, the unique system of transferring cargo to and from aircraft in flight, has brought direct air service within reach of every community in the world, regardless of size, location or airport facilities.

All American Aviation, pioneer in the development of Air Pick-Up, was founded by the late Richard C. du Pont, who lost his life in 1943 while in charge of the Army's military glider program.

Here is told the story of the company he founded, its commercial service to the public, its military service to the nation and a forecast of its future.

It is a dramatic story of the fulfillment of a man's vision, and the fulfillment of a national policy of Congress as found in the Civil Aeronautics Act.
